promote headlines of thousands of accused criminals, particularly of young black and Hispanic men.

Some critics have suggested that the program discourages crime, noting that with higher arrest rates comes higher recidivism rates. However, others argue that the program is necessary to ensure public safety.

In conclusion, the role of police in the city's justice system is crucial. As the city continues to evolve, it is important to consider the impact of policing policies and practices on the communities they serve.